

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I dedicate this book to the Gitanos of el Rastro that welcomed me into their churches, markets, homes and lives, for me to learn about what it means to live in the world ‘the Gitano way’ (‘a la manera Gitana’). I know that many of you overcame your initial scepticism towards me as an outsider to allow me to spend an extensive amount of time in your midst. I am so grateful for that. A special thanks goes to my close friends Bobola and Manuel, the ‘grandparents’ of my children. Without your friendship, support, advice, insights and warmth, my stay in Madrid would have lost so much. We have enjoyed so many nice moments together; during dinner, while swimming in your pool, going shopping, having a cup of coffee, attending church or visiting your friends and family. I am eternally thankful for all your help; this study would have been so meagre without it.

I am grateful to Professor Emeritus Tord Larsen – your reading of the Introduction and our coffee talks provided valuable anthropological insights and knowledge. Your (and Professor Emeritus Stein E. Johansen’s) stimulating seminar in the spring of 2018 inspired some of the analytical turns I make in this book. I would also like to thank Professor Emeritus Olaf Smedal for all your support, and great thanks goes to Professor Emerita Anne Kathrine Larsen for suggesting I lead with intuition rather than with reference to a more structured framework in my writing; as you said, ‘yeah, well of course, that’s your style, isn’t it?’, and also to Professor Lorenzo Cañas-Bottos, who, at the right time, made me structure myself after all. I am very grateful to both of you. Special thanks to Professor Liv Haram, who showed great interest, curiosity and enthusiasm for my project. I am so thankful for that! Thank you for your patience in reading all my lengthy sentences and literary detours, and for helping me carve out my own ethnographic findings.

I am very grateful for the collaboration I have had with the brilliant editors at Berghahn; it has been a wonderful process. I am also highly indebted to the anonymous reviewers, who read the unfinished manuscript with enthusiasm, patience and understanding. Your insightful comments and advice proved invaluable in the process of finishing the book.

I would like to thank former colleagues and students at the Department of Social Anthropology (NTNU) who listened to my seminar and conference presentations about the topic of study. Your comments and elaborations have been of great importance for the development of this book. Thanks to my fantastic colleagues at the Department of Social Work at Nord University – I really appreciate all your wisdom, critical thinking and humour. Thank you for all the space I was given to finish this book.

Thank you to Randi Reitan (reflexologist), Kirsti Vanvik (physiotherapist) and Arne Kausland (acupuncturist) for your indispensable efforts in helping my body carry the weight of the work. Big thanks to Reidun Bolsø – you showed me through your sparkling and vibrant being – in both Cuba (2009) and el Rastro (2013) – that I could in fact relate to my interlocutors in a totally different way and still not ruin my relationship with them. Great thanks to Sunniva Hammerås, who was with me those final weeks of fieldwork in el Rastro, in el culto, in Gitano homes and at the hospital; thanks also for getting me back home on that plane! Janne Varpe, thank you for your brilliant everyday poetry and oblique perspectives, and for bringing food, painting walls, hanging up light-proof curtains and always being supportive and understanding. Erlend Thorup, thank you for your engaging intellect and humour – I owe you both a sauna session and a fine port. Thanks also to Morten Claussen, for early readings of my research material and for feeding me with relevant literature all the way through. Thank you Arne Bygdås for all our travels together to conferences around the world. A special thanks to all the wonderful mums, dads and kids in Sjøvegen; you make everyday life festive, and you have contributed more to the finalization of this study than you can imagine.

To my parents, Kirsti and Christopher, who, when I was a child, filled our living room with people from ‘all over the world’ – men and women from Palestine, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Eritrea and Russia, as well as Norwegians from a range of backgrounds (nurses, social workers, carpenters, novelists, rock climbers, farmers, socialists, communists and what not). Thank you for bringing the world into our home and for sharing your great social and political engagement with us kids. You taught us that human social differences are interesting and wonderful, that though others’ values and opinions can at times appear challenging and troublesome we should always defend them for the richness they bring, a richness that none of us could be without. I thank you for all your energy, humour, warmth and wisdom – and not least for reading several drafts of my study. To my brothers Benjamin and Marcus, to my sister Johanna and to my in-laws, nephews and nieces, you all make up my ‘village’ – you are always in my heart and thoughts even though we live 500 kilometres apart. I really look forward to our future gatherings!

Special thanks to Charlotte, Ylva and Ruben – your wonderfully clever, humoristic, strong, empathic and explorative being in the world inspires and engages me every single day. Thank you from the bottom of my heart for welcoming me into your lives, as a friend and – as a bonus – mother. To Ulrik and Amalie, granny ‘mimmi’ loves you! To my wonderful children Liam and August – with your constant energetic presence, sensation-seeking actions, humorous questions, expressivity and unconditional love, you are my everything. To Emil, husband, friend and the love of my life. Thank you for your close and critical readings of several drafts of this book. Without it, it would certainly not have survived other critical interrogations down the road. I love our days together, filled with continuously mind-twisting discussions and reflections, heart-warming humour and playfulness and continuously arising projects, plans, dreams and hopes. I am eternally grateful for everything we create together. Words fall short.

I hereby certify that the work presented in this book – above all, its mistakes and shortcomings – is entirely my own.
