

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is one outcome of a collaborative research project bringing together researchers from across Europe and its neighbouring countries. The Dialogue about Radicalisation and Equality (DARE) project received funding from the European Union's Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme (Grant Agreement No. 725349), and we would like to acknowledge the financial support of the European Commission and the very human support of our Project Adviser, Kerstin Wilde, over four and a half years of intense work. Those years included two years of coping with the constantly shifting parameters of possibility, for travel, fieldwork – or any work at all – as we all coped with our own personal and national contexts of the COVID-19 pandemic. The support and patience from the European Commission and the dedication and resilience of the whole research team through this difficult period was incredible. I would like to thank also Diana Chase and Charlotte Jones for their amazing project management skills and above all their kindness, support and humour at the most difficult points in the project.

Only a fraction of the research and a small number of researchers from the whole project are represented in this volume. However, these contributions would not have been possible without the work done by the whole team, either on country-level case studies or on strands of the research that inform, but are not the main focus of, this volume. This book is thus more than a collection of articles by individual researchers; it is a product of the whole research collective. The authors are indebted to the analytic insight and commitment of all the researchers from all countries involved.

Our thanks are expressed also to all the research participants, mainly young people, who agreed to take part in the empirical research conducted for the project. We thank them for their time but above all their trust that we would engage critically but honestly with what they told us. We hope we have fulfilled this commitment.

Finally, we would like to thank Tony Mason and Tom Bonnington at Berghahn for their enthusiasm and support in preparation of the book and the anonymous peer reviewers for their extremely helpful suggestions and comments on both the proposal and the manuscript. Given the polarisation in debate often encountered when researching in this field, we are particularly appreciative of their constructive engagement with this project.
